in the nineteenth century the russian empire s middle volga region today s tatarstan was the site of a prolonged struggle between russian orthodoxy and islam each of which sought to solidify its influence among the frontier s mix of turkic finno ugric and slavic peoples the immediate catalyst of the events that agnes nilufer kefeli chronicles in becoming muslim in imperial russia was the collective turn to islam by many of the region s krashens the muslim and animist tatars who converted to russian orthodoxy between the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries the traditional view holds that the apostates had really been muslim all along or that their conversions had been forced by the state or undertaken voluntarily as a matter of convenience in kefeli s view this argument vastly oversimplifies the complexity of a region where many participated in the religious cultures of both islam and orthodox christianity and where a vibrant krashen community has survived to the present by analyzing russian eurasian and central asian ethnographic administrative literary and missionary sources kefeli shows how traditional education with sufi mystical components helped to islamize finno ugric and turkic peoples in the kama volga countryside and set the stage for the development of modernist islam in russia of particular interest is kefeli s emphasis on the role that tatar women both krashen and muslim played as holders and transmitters of sufi knowledge today she notes intellectuals and mullahs in tatarstan seek to revive both sufi and modernist traditions to counteract new expressions of islam and promote a purely tatar islam aware of its specificity in a post christian and secular environment

Islam as a religion is central to the lives of over a billion people but its outer expression as a distinctive civilization has been undergoing a monumental crisis buffeted by powerful adverse currents. Islamic civilization today is a shadow of its former self. The most disturbing and possibly fatal of these currents, the imperial expansion of the West into Muslim lands and the blast of modernity that accompanied it, are now compounded by a third giant wave, globalization. These forces have increasingly tested Islam and Islamic civilization for validity, adaptability, and the ability to hold on to the loyalty of Muslims. Says Ali A. Allawi in his provocative new book, while the faith has proved resilient in the face of these challenges, other aspects of Islamic civilization have atrophied or died. Allawi contends that Islamic civilization is now undergoing its last crisis. The book explores how Islamic civilization began to unravel under colonial rule as its institutions, laws, and economies were often replaced by inadequate modern equivalents. Allawi also examines the backlash expressed through the increasing religiosity of Muslim societies and the spectacular rise of political Islam and its terrorist offshoots. Assessing the status of each of the building blocks of Islamic civilization, the author concludes that Islamic civilization cannot survive without the vital spirituality that underpinned it in the past. He identifies a key set of principles for moving forward—principles that will surprise some and anger others yet clearly must be considered.

Metabolomics can critically assess key metabolic pathways and thus provide data for nutritional deficiencies, metabolic imbalance, environmental burden, and the gut microbiome. Since metabolite functions are not determined by epigenetic regulation or post-translational modification, quantification and evaluation of metabolites is an highly effective method to capture time-dependent fluctuations and cellular metabolic state even prior to disease onset. Blood serum is a primary carrier of small molecules in the body, present in the blood of every tissue and organ in the body. It plays a critical role in transporting dissolved gases, nutrients, hormones, and metabolic wastes, as well as in the regulation of the pH and ion composition of interstitial fluids, the restriction of fluid losses at injury sites, and the defence against toxins and pathogens.

The volume has a twofold purpose: first to question main presuppositions and perceptions regarding religion and international politics in the Middle East, and second to reflect on the role(s) of religion in the regional order. The first part deals with the contribution of religion to a post-Western turn in international relations in the Middle East and beyond. It discusses the postsecular conceptual framework in order to expand their approaches to the analysis of the middle east and addresses the search for religion's suitable place within international relations taking as a starting point the social changes in the world and the postulated mesopotamian turn in international relations the second part focuses on the role of state like non state actors isis challenged the international order because contrary to revolutionary states in the past it negates the foundations of the westphalian system at the same time the rise of isis had a tremendous impact on the jihadi sub system the third part studies the impact of religion on foreign and security policy israel uae uk and saudi arabia it explores how religion has been shaping each stage of the decision making process the position that religion holds in perceptions of stability in the post 2011 era and the politics of moderate islam arguing that even though moderate islam has been devised for creating soft power it serves sharp power as well
