seeking to explain lebanon s behavior in the international arena during the 2006 war between hezbollah and israel this book offers a critique of both systemic and sub state factors in determining foreign policy decisions the making of lebanese foreign policy illustrates how systemic theories are limited in terms of explaining foreign policy decisions because they largely ignore the role of internal or sub state factors within lebanon foreign policy is split between the interests of different internal lebanese groups working in alliance with external actors the competing interests of these internal groups compromise the cohesion of the lebanese state and its capacity to promote its own interests above those of the different internal groups the example of lebanon during the 2006 war thus demonstrates the importance of these sub state factors in influencing state behaviour on an international level arguing that a more pluralistic approach is necessary in order to understand the conditions that affect the foreign policy making of the lebanese state this book fills an important gap in the literature on the topic and will be of interest to students of international relations middle east studies and islamic studies amongst others

after fifteen years of reconstruction in a relatively peaceful environment spanning the years 1990 to 2004 lebanon has experienced successive violent political events resulting from complex entangled internal and external struggles the syrian crisis and its political this book presents a critical analysis of the liberal peace project and offers possible alternatives and models in the past decade the model used for reconstructing societies after conflicts has been based on liberal assumptions about the pacifying effects of open markets and open societies yet despite the vast resources invested in helping establish the precepts of this liberal peace outcomes have left much to be desired the book argues that failures in the liberal peace project are not only due to efficiency problems related to its adaptation in adverse local environments but mostly due to problems of legitimacy of turning an ideal into a doctrine for action the aim of the book is to scrutinize assumptions about the value of democratization and marketization and realities on the ground by combining theoretical discussions with empirical evidence from key post conflict settings such as iraq and afghanistan these show the disparities that exist between the ideals and the reality of the liberal peace project as seen by external peacebuilders and domestic actors the book then proposes various alternatives and modifications to better accommodate local perspectives values and agency in attempts to forge a new consensus this book will be of great interest to students of peacebuilding peacekeeping statebuilding war and conflict studies international security and ir

this book analyses the events leading up to the cluster munitions ban the provisions of the treaty as well as assesses the progress made in the years since towards a world without the presence of cluster munitions cluster bombs are weapons that are small but deadly they often look like small metal canisters and some of them are painted giving them the innocuous appearance of a soda can the unexploded submunitions that are scattered on the ground in effect act as landmines that can kill or severely injure anyone who comes across them sometimes even years and decades later it has been reported that 98 of all casualties of cluster munitions are civilians of which one third are children cluster munitions have been used in numerous conflicts since the second world war and it has been estimated that at least 1 billion submunitions were stockpiled globally for decades humanitarian organizations sought to limit the use of these weapons but international consensus on the issue was hard to come by the campaign to ban cluster munitions faced a monumental and nearly impossible task to convince governments to agree to stop using a valuable weapon in their arsenals that they stockpiled by the hundreds of thousands in a political climate where the interests of national security and state sovereignty outweighed humanitarian concerns in almost every instance however where many international agreements failed and diplomatic processes stalled the campaign to ban cluster munitions succeeded despite strong opposition from many countries 107 countries met in dublin in may 2008 to negotiate and adopt a treaty prohibiting the use production transfer and stockpiling of cluster munitions the outcome of the oslo process was a ray of hope among the usual cynicism and disenchantment of similar international processes this book explores this question how was this accomplished and are there any wider lessons to be learned from it this book offers a reconceptualisation of conventional deterrence theory and applies it to enduring rivalries in the middle east the work argues that many of the problems encountered in the development of deterrence theory lay in the fact that it was developed during the cold war when the immediate problem it had to address was how to prevent catastrophic nuclear wars the logic of nuclear deterrence compelled a preoccupation with the problem of stability over credibility however because the logic of conventional deterrence is different the solution of the tension between credibility and stability is achieved by deference to credibility due to the requirements of reputation and costly signaling this book aims to narrow the gap between theory and evidence it explores how a reconceptualization of the theory as a process that culminates in the internalization of deterrence within enduring rivalries is better suited to account for its final success a finding that has eluded deterrence theorists for long this interdisciplinary book will be of much interest to students of deterrence theory strategic studies international security middle eastern studies and ir in general
