the nation's black ops budget is overburdened and the best way to secretly re-allocate money is to do it in the open and exploit legitimate channels: your school taxes. But for this charade to succeed, the cadets will not only have to look like ordinary high school students but act like them as well. Now they're being ordered to get really good at goofing off and to camouflage themselves as stereotypical jocks, bullies, nerds, and prom queens.

This edited collection draws its authors from both sides of the island to give a rounded picture of musical culture from the beginning of the British colonial period until today. The authors consider what is the role of different musics in defining national, regional, social, and cultural identities in Cyprus. How do Cypriot alterities illuminate European projects of modernity? What has been the impact of westernization and modernization and conversely of orientalizations on music in Cyprus? The book will be of interest to academics working in historical musicology, ethnomusicology, and the history and anthropology of Cyprus and of the entire Greek Anatolian region.

Johanne Durocher fights to free her daughter and four grandchildren from a nightmarish life of abuse and poverty in Saudi Arabia. In 2001, Nathalie Morin was just seventeen when she met Saeed, a Saudi man who claimed to be studying in Montreal. She fell in love with him but soon after she gave birth to their son, Saeed was deported back to his country of origin, struggling as a single mother and wanting Samir to know his father. Nathalie travelled to Saudi Arabia to reunite her family, confident that she would be able to return to Canada whenever she wanted. But a trap was closing around her. Her partner turned out to be authoritarian and violent, the abuse continuing until their last child was born according to Saudi law. Nathalie was considered married and, under Saeed's legal authority, all too often she was shut away in her own house, a place of hellish poverty. In 2005, Johanne Durocher, Nathalie's mother, began her decades-long struggle to get Nathalie back home to Canada with her four children: Samir, Abdullah, Sarah, and Fowaz. While Nathalie is allowed to return on her own, her children cannot leave because of a travel ban imposed by the Saudi government, and Nathalie will not leave without them. Johanne's relentless fight for her family has garnered the support of several members of the provincial and federal governments, activists, and NGOs, including Amnesty International, who considers Nathalie to be a survivor of gender-based violence.

Linda Anderson explores Elizabeth Bishop's poetry from her early days at Vassar College to her last great poems in Geography III and the later uncollected poems, drawing generously on Bishop's notebooks and letters. The book situates Bishop both in her historical and cultural context and in terms of her own writing process, where the years between beginning a poem and completing it for which Bishop is legendary are seen as a necessary part of their composition. The book begins by offering a new reading of Bishop's relationship with Marianne Moore and with modernism through her journeys to Europe. Bishop, it is also argued, learned a great deal from visual artists and from surrealism however the book also follows the way bishop came back to memories of her childhood developing ideas about narrative in order to explore time both the losses it demands and the connections it makes possible the lines of connections are both those between bishop and her contemporaries and her context and those she inscribed through her own work suggesting how her poems incorporate a process of arrival and create new possibilities of meaning systems studied in environmental science due to their structure and the heterogeneity of the entities composing them often exhibit complex dynamics that can only be captured by hybrid modeling approaches while several concurrent definitions of hybrid modeling can be found in the literature it is defined here broadly as the approach consisting in coupling existing modelling paradigms to achieve a more accurate or efficient representation of systems the need for hybrid models generally arises from the necessity to overcome the limitation of a single modeling technique in terms of structural flexibility capabilities or computational efficiency this book brings together experts in the field of hybrid modelling to demonstrate how this approach can address the challenge of representing the complexity of natural systems chapters cover applied examples as well as modeling methodology
